

Protecting Your Brand Online

Monday, June 12, 2006

Via Electronic & First Class Mail

Karen Dudnikov, a/k/a Tabberone
Karen@tabberone.com

RE: Net Enforcers Corporate Matters & Formal Introduction

Greetings Karen:

My name is Joseph Loomis. I am the President of Net Enforcers, Inc. It has recently come to my attention that you may be offering admonition to various persons or parties that have been previously identified by Net Enforcers to be in violation of our client's various intellectual property rights. Recognizing your unique position to provide relief to such individuals and/or entities, I offer my personal assistance towards the resolution of any and all disputes to which you may become aware.

Net Enforcers' normal course of business involves the good faith protection of our client's intellectual property rights. The vast majority of our operations involve copyright and trademark enforcement of which we perform on our client's behalf. This enforcement is achieved through the manual patrolling of specific avenues of commerce across the internet. We conduct the entirety of our enforcement efforts in strict compliance with the Digital Millennium Copyright Act as well as other federally-established rules and regulations.

Having read through the lion's share of legal disputes you have been personally involved in, it is my perception that you are well-versed in the intricacies of intellectual property, trade, and general business law. I admire your pugnacity and fortitude in dealing with those who attempt to skew, if not outright ignore, the laws and protections governing online commerce. Net Enforcers does not employ intimidation tactics, threats or initiate bad faith claims against anyone we find to be in violation of our client's intellectual property rights. Our intentions are not to interfere with any rightful business operations or to restrict trade or place undue burden on legitimate small business owners.

Unlike the bulk of corporations you have encountered through dispute, Net Enforcers has no disillusion concerning the breadth of enforcement tactics we can lawfully employ. We are involved solely in the legitimate protection of our client's intellectual property rights. In the spirit of achieving a timely and amicable resolution to any conflict of thought that may come to pass, it is with utmost sincerity that we solicit any feedback or conception that you may be so inclined as to provide us.

In reiteration, I truly hope that you will contact me directly regarding any areas of concern you may have with our business model or our day-to-day operations. I am confident in Net Enforcers' ability to resolve any past, present, or future disputes to your utmost satisfaction. Thank you in advance for your time and consideration.

Protecting Your Brand Online

Very truly yours,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Joseph Loomis', is written over the typed name.

Joseph Loomis
CEO & President
Net Enforcers, Inc.